1. Purpose

To provide a safe, efficient, and compliant work environment. To achieve this, the company ensures that every employee receives the necessary training to perform their duties competently, understand workplace hazards (including food safety protocols), and comply with all internal and regulatory standards.

2. Scope

The training is mandatory and is divided into three distinct phases to ensure continuous competency:

- New hire Induction: General orientation covering company culture, basic health and safety, hygiene standards, and emergency procedures. It must be completed before an employee assumes active duties.
- Role-Specific Training: Technical training focused on the exact duties of the job (e.g., Operating specific kitchen equipment, executing HACCP protocols, or using point-of-sale software.)
- Refresher and Compliance Training: Ongoing, mandatory training conducted annually (or as required by law) to reinforce critical skills, update employees on new SOPs, or address corrective actions

3. Responsibilities

3.1. Human Resources/ Learning and Development Management

Shall be responsible for identifying overall training needs, securing resources or third-party trainers, and maintaining the “Talent and Capability Matrix” for the company

3.2. Department Heads/ Supervisors

Shall be responsible for executing on-the-job training, conducting observational assessment (watching the employee perform the task), and identifying skill gaps in their daily shift workers.

3.3. Employees

Shall actively participate in all assigned training, ask questions if a procedure is unclear, and consistently apply the trained standards to their daily work.

4. Definition of Terms

- Induction Training: A mandatory initial orientation provided to new employees covering company culture, basic health and safety, hygiene standards, and emergency procedures, which must be completed before assuming active duties.
- Role-Specific Training: Hands-on, technical training focused on the exact operational duties of an employee’s position, including operating kitchen equipment, executing HACCP protocols, or utilizing point-of-sale (POS) software.
- Refresher and Compliance Training: Ongoing, mandatory training conducted annually (or as legally required) to reinforce critical skills, deliver updates on new SOPs, or address required corrective actions.
- Competency: The measurable and demonstrated ability of an employee to understand and successfully execute a task to established standards, proven via testing or direct observation.

- Talent and Capability Matrix: The centralized tracking document and spreadsheet managed by HR / Learning and Development to monitor employee training history, skill gaps, and upcoming refresher deadlines.

5. Procedure

5.1. New Hire Induction Phase

Before any new employee assumes active operational duties, they must undergo the mandatory orientation process. Human Resources and the Learning and Development Management team are responsible for coordinating this phase, which covers foundational company culture, basic health and safety protocols, hygiene standards, and emergency procedures. The induction concludes with a foundational theoretical assessment to verify initial understanding.

5.2. Role-Specific Training Execution

Upon successful completion of the induction, the employee transitions to technical training tailored directly to their job description. Department Heads and Supervisors are responsible for delivering this on-the-job instruction, focusing on exact duties such as operating specific kitchen equipment, executing HACCP food safety protocols, and using point-of-sale software.

5.3. Competency Assessment

Attending a training session does not automatically equal competency. To prove capability, employees must be evaluated using a two-pronged approach: written or digital quizzes for theoretical knowledge, and practical observation where a supervisor physically watches the employee successfully complete the task. If an employee fails to demonstrate competency, management will pull them from the task and initiate immediate, documented retraining. Repeated failures after retraining will trigger a formal performance review.

5.4. Documentation and Record-Keeping

Every training session must conclude with a physical or digital sign-off sheet signed by both the trainer and trainee, acknowledging that the material was taught and understood. The Learning and Development Management team will log these completed milestones into the centralized Talent and Capability Matrix spreadsheet to track operational readiness and flag upcoming due dates. All physical certificates, quiz results, and sign-off sheets must be forwarded to HR to be permanently filed in the employee's official personnel file for the duration of their employment plus one year.

5.5. Refresher and Compliance Training

To maintain continuous competency and address daily skill gaps, mandatory refresher training is conducted annually or as required by law. This ongoing training reinforces critical operational skills, updates staff on newly revised SOPs, or implements corrective actions resulting from performance reviews. No employee may bypass these mandatory annual updates if they wish to remain active in their specific role.

6. Assessment and Competency

Attending a training session does not automatically equal competency. Employees must demonstrate they understand the material through one of the following methods:

6.1. Written or Digital Quizzes: Used for theoretical knowledge

6.2. Practical Observation: A supervisor must physically observe the employee successfully completing a task

7. Documentation and Record-Keeping

If a training is not documented, it never happened.

7.1. Sign-Off Sheets: Every training session must conclude with a physical or digital signature from both the trainer and trainee, acknowledging that the material was taught and understood

7.2. Personnel Files: Copies of all training certificates, quiz results, and sign-off sheets must be kept in the employee's official file for the duration of their employment plus one year.

7.3. Training Matrix: Management will maintain a centralized spreadsheet tracking who has been trained on what, and when their next refresher course is due.

8. Corrective Action and Retraining

Training is the primary tool for correcting poor performance.

8.1. Retraining: If an employee is found violating a safety standard, SOP, or FSMS protocol, they will be immediately pulled from that task for documented retraining.

8.2. Failure to Pass: If an employee repeatedly fails to demonstrate competency after retraining, management will initiate a performance review to determine if the employee is suited for that specific role.

9. Verification

To ensure this SOP is being executed effectively and remains compliant with company standards, several key verification activities must be performed. First, as part of the quarterly audit, Human Resource (head office) and Learning and Development (store level) shall review the Talent and Capability Matrix on a monthly basis to ensure 100% compliance with upcoming annual refreshers and verify that no new hires are working active shifts without completed inductions. Second, during quarterly document reviews, the QA shall conduct random audits of employee personal files to verify that physical or digital sign-off sheets , certificates, and quiz results are completely filled out, signed, and safely archived. Third, for on-the-floor compliance checks, Operations Managers and Area Managers shall conduct routine, unannounced operational walkthroughs to verify that employees are actively executing tasks, such as food safety and equipment handling, according to their training protocols. Finally, this training procedure shall undergo an annual SOP re-evaluation by the QA Specialist and Store Manager to ensure it remains aligned with updated regulatory standards and company food safety protocols , with any subsequent adjustments formally logged in the Change History.
